

Making Biblical Scholarship Accessible

This document was supplied for free educational purposes. Unless it is in the public domain, it may not be sold for profit or hosted on a webserver without the permission of the copyright holder.

If you find it of help to you and would like to support the ministry of Theology on the Web, please consider using the links below:

A table of contents for Grace Journal can be found here:

https://biblicalstudies.org.uk/articles_grace-journal.php

ISAIAH'S IMMANUEL

EDWARD E. HINDSON

Many attempts have been made to identify and demonstrate the significance of the figure immanuel" in the writings of Isaiah. His name appears in 7:14; 8:8; 8:10. It is interesting at children play an important role in these chapters which deal with the virgin's son, the birth Maher-shalal-hash-baz and the child who will rule on David's throne.

Early interpreters preferred a "messianic" fulfillment, but the bulk of critical comnentators in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries denied the "messianic" interpretation of the manuel passage. Soon, conservative writers began to take a dual-fulfillment viewpoint in an tempt to reconcile the arguments of both.<sup>1</sup> Today, the general opinion is still quite mixed. aly Edward J. Young has written a major commentary in support of the strictly "messianic" we in the past half-century.<sup>2</sup>

The "Book of Immanuel" covers 7:1-12:6.<sup>3</sup> Two questions are prominent in the interretation of this passage: 1) Who is Immanuel? 2) Did Isaiah consider him to be already resent in the land? Undoubtedly the most detail on him is given in chapter seven. Therefore, is obvious that a proper interpretation necessitates a careful study of the 7:14 section.

BACKGROUND

According to the information supplied by Isaiah in 7:1-9, Syria and the Northern Kingom (Ephraim) had formed an alliance against Judah because of her refusal to join them in standing gainst powerful Assyria. Their obvious intention was to replace Ahaz with their own "puppeting" who would co-operate with their ambitions. Fearing the invasion of his neighbors, Ahaz as inclined to call on the aid of the Assyrian conqueror, Tiglath-pileser. According to 2 Kings 5:37, Syria and Ephraim had already attacked Judah in the days of Jotham. From 2 Kings 16:5, e learn that they came against Jerusalem without success, yet (according to 2 Chron. 28:5) haz was captured and one hundred twenty thousand of Judah were slain. In relating the two counts, it seems that the Kings passage tells the beginning and end of the siege; while Chronlles fills in the intervening events. 2 Kings 16, therefore, appears to be parallel to Isaiah.

dward E. Hindson holds the M.A. degree from Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, and is resently a postgraduate student at Grace Theological Seminary.

Rezin, King of Syria, appears to be the instigator, since the verb is singular and t conjunction before Pekah indicates that: "Rezin came up, together with Pekah" against Jerusale (the principal object of their advance).<sup>4</sup> Having captured Ahaz, Rezin seems to have given hi over to Pekah and the spoil which had been taken from Judah was delivered to Samaria. The year 734 B.C. has generally been accepted as the date for the prophecy given in Isaiah seven,

At Samaria, however, the prophet Oded and certain Ephraimitic chiefs advised the return of the captives and apparently Ahaz was also sent back to Jerusalem. This did not, how ever, seem to deter the intentions of Rezin and Pekah since they regrouped for further attack. What had panicked Ahaz was the announcement that the Syrian army had not returned home, be was "resting" ( $\underline{n\bar{a}h\bar{a}h}$ ) upon Ephraim, and evidently this "friendly halt" in Israelite territor only signified evil consequences to Ahaz.<sup>6</sup> To him, appeal to Assyria seemed to be the on solution. It was at this time that Isaiah came to dissuade Ahaz from taking a wrong course action by relying upon Assyria rather than the Lord. To do so he sought to bring a word comfort and victory to the fearful monarch who thought all was hopeless.

The fact that Isaiah found Ahaz by the upper pool is evidence that the king was expectit to be attacked and was attempting to ensure the water supply.<sup>7</sup> We see Isaiah coming to methe young king at the end of the conduit of the upper pool in the highway of the fuller's field which is west of the city. Accompanying his father is Shear-Yashub("a remnant shall return" The significance of his presence has been overlooked by many. In chapter eight we are to that Isaiah's sons are for "signs." Therefore, it would not be improper to find meaning in the boy's name, which is indicative of hope. It is a striking name in which the emphasis falls up the "remnant" rather than the "returning," indicating God's actual dealings with His people.

Isaiah tells Ahaz that the two firebrands from the north (Rezin of Syria and Pekah ( Ephraim) are only "smoldering sticks." Though they have devised evil against the throne ( David by setting up the son of Tabeel,<sup>9</sup> they shall not succeed, for God has other purposes for that throne. In 2 Samuel 7:14-17, God had promised a permanent dynasty to the throne ( David. It was to be reserved for the coming of the "Anointed One." The prophet then call for faith and courage from Ahaz to receive what he is about to say.

The most helpful and clear picture of the introduction and warning is given in a chan by Raven. 10

	SYRIA	EPHRAIM	JUDAH
AFFIR - MATION	The Head of Syria is Damascus and the Head of Damascus is Rezin.	The Head of Ephraim is Samaria and the Head of Samaria is the Son of Remaliah.
PREDIC- TION		Within three-score and five years shall Ephraim be broken that it be not a people.	lf ye believe no surely ye sha not remain.

ISAIAH'S IMMANUEL

The poetic structure makes it clear that Ephraim is to fall and within sixty-five years se all national distinction, and that Judah will also fall if she does not heed God's warning.<sup>11</sup> ere we have the picture. Judah has begun to weaken, but Ahaz refuses to submit to his northrn invaders. But rather than turn to God, he would seek the support of the Assyrian Empire. should be remembered that Ahaz was the one who introduced the pagan Assyrian altar to the mple worship in Jerusalem. He was a man who had been deliberately disobedient to God. nly such a man could reject the promise of help from God that was about to be extended to him.

"THEREFORE"

Having renounced Ahaz for trying his and God's patience by refusing the sign that had een offered him to assure of God's blessing, Isaiah connects his statements in verse 13 to prse 14 with the Hebrew particle lākēn ("therefore"). Its emphasis may be clarified by such trases as: "since this is so," "for these reasons," "according to such conditions."<sup>12</sup>

This connective word often was used by the prophets to introduce a divine command or eclaration. Most commentators have not bothered to deal much with this word. Young and udde, however, stress its relationship to verse 13. They feel it serves to introduce a "sign a different character from that which had previously been offered."<sup>13</sup> Ahaz could have nosen any sign to attest God's message of hope as delivered by the prophet, but he refused nd, "therefore," God will choose His own sign.

The context into which verse 14 fits is unified by the transitory word, "therefore." The orried king will not trust in God, so the prophet announces that God will give a sign to the ation of Judah that will command their trust in Him. Since the line of David is at stake and iter the nation will be removed, the people needed some confidence to trust in God's mainining the throne of David for "all generations." It is the sign of Immanuel that commands heir confidence in God. Isaiah had taken a message of hope to the king, but in return he will ive him a sign of eventual doom (to Judah) and or ultimate hope (to the throne of David).

"SIGN"

In Scripture the word  $\frac{1}{20t}$  refers to something addressed to the senses to attest the existnce of divine power. Often extraordinary events were given as a sign to assure faith or to emonstrate authority. Many opinions have been expressed as to the significance of the "sign" h this passage.<sup>14</sup> The term seems not necessarily to demand a miracle in every instance, but ather is a pledge of the truth of something.<sup>15</sup> The main purpose in God's giving the sign to haz was to establish the vindication of Isaiah's divine commission.

It should be noted that the "sign" was given by the Lord ( $\frac{2 a}{a donai}$ ). The covenant name hwh is not used here. Usually, Isaiah uses  $\frac{2 a}{a donai}$  to emphasize the Lord's omnipotence. 16 t is He alone who can give such a sign as will follow.

GRACE JOURNAL

It is also important to notice that the sign is directed to "you" (plural) and is not ev dently directed to Ahaz who rejected the first offer.<sup>17</sup> In v. 13, Isaiah had said: "Hear ye now O house of David" and it is apparent that the plural "you" in v. 14, is to be connected to i antecedent "ye" in v. 13. Since the context tells us that the dynasty of David is what is at stal in the impending invasion, it would seem proper to interpret the plural "you" as the "house David" which is the recipient of the sign.<sup>18</sup>

This being true, then, all objections to the relevancy of a messianic prediction to Ahaz contemporary situation are nullified. The prophet did not direct the sign merely to Ahaz and therefore, a strictly messianic interpretation of the sign is not out of the question. This matter of the relevancy of the sign has been the main argument of those criticizing the messianic interpretation of the passage. Such an argument does not necessarily prove the non-messianic (dual-fulfillment viewpoint at all.<sup>19</sup> The major question raised by the context is that of the preservation of the threatened throne of David, and the forthcoming sign must answer that question.

"BEHOLD"

The word hinēh ("behold") is used to arrest the attention. Here, Isaiah uses it to intreduce Immanuel. This form of announcement is similar to Genesis 16:11 where Hagar: addressed, and to Judges 13:5, 7 which is an annunciation to the wife of Manoah. In all threcases an unusually important event is signified. The word "behold" is merely an interjection but when used with a participle hinēh does introduce either a present or future action. <sup>20</sup> Tr main question is whether hārāh in this verse is a participle. Young points out that the regula feminine participle would be horāh and concludes that hārāh is a verbal adjective.<sup>21</sup> Therefore not much weight should be given to the usage of hinēh as expressing any tense.<sup>22</sup> The reimportance of the use of this term seems to be its calling attention to the significance of whi is to follow: the virgin and her son.

'almāh

Undoubtedly few words have received more extensive treatment than the form Isaia used in this passage to represent the girl who was to bear Immanuel. Since the nineteent century a great verbal battle has raged over which translation of this word is the proper one "virgin" or "maiden." The Hebrew definite article h is used in connection with 'almāh. Th usual English translation of the article is "the." Lindblom says: "the most natural explanatio is that a definite woman is in view."<sup>23</sup> Hengstenberg felt that the relation of hinēh to th article in ha 'almāh is best explained by the present tense of the context, so that, the girl i present to the inward perception of the prophet.<sup>24</sup> It is unlikely that the prophet meant merel any woman when he specified "the" 'almāh.<sup>25</sup>

Young has followed Alexander in maintaining that Isaiah does not necessarily use th article to denote some well-known virgin, but rather in the generic sense, some particular yet unknown, person.<sup>26</sup> Whoever this girl is, Isaiah must be aware enough of her distinctive ness to specify "the"  $\frac{c}{\operatorname{alm}\bar{a}h}$ ; therefore, when one attempts to identify Immanuel, he should emember that he too is some definite person and not merely a vague abstraction. 'Almāh and mmanuel are both seen by Isaiah as being real individuals.

The meaning of 'almāh has been much debated, but all agree that it at least means a irl or young woman above the age of childhood who has arrived at sexual maturity. The more ommonly used word for "virgin" in the Old Testament is bethulāh. Many have contended that f Isaiah had meant to say "virgin" he would have used bethulāh, and since he did not, we should eject the interpretation of 'almāh as "virgin."<sup>27</sup> Gray states that "it asserts neither virginity or the lack of it."<sup>28</sup>

However, Dewart long ago rightly advised that the use of a word, not its etymology, etermines its meaning.<sup>29</sup> Though it is true that  $\frac{c_{aIm\bar{a}h}}{c_{aIm\bar{a}h}}$  is not the common word for virgin, its mployment always denotes a virgin. The word  $\frac{c_{aIm\bar{a}h}}{c_{aIm\bar{a}h}}$  occurs in Scripture five times in the lural and four times in the singular. In Song of Solomon 1:3 and 6:8 the  $\frac{c_{aI\bar{a}moth}}{c_{aI\bar{a}moth}}$  are distinuished from "queens" and "concubines" as the virgins of the harem. In Psalm 68:26; 46:1 and Chronicles 15:20 the use of  $\frac{c_{aI\bar{a}moth}}{c_{aI\bar{a}moth}}$  as "singers" and "players" does not specify that they are irgins, but neither does it imply that they are not. In Genesis 24:43 we are told that Rebekah s an almāh and that she has not had sexual relations with any man. She is also called a ethulāh. It is apparent, then, that the word  $\frac{c_{aIm\bar{a}h}}{c_{aIm\bar{a}h}}$  may suitably describe a girl who is a irgin. In Exodus 2:8, Miriam is also described as an  $\frac{c_{aIm\bar{a}h}}{c_{aIm\bar{a}h}}$  who is living at home.

The only passage really in question is Proverbs 30:19, where some try to relate dulterous connotations to the 'almāh mentioned there. The writer of the proverb expresses four hings that are "too wonderful" for him: the way of an eagle in the air; the way of a serpent upon rock; the way of a ship in the midst of the sea; and the way of a man with a 'almāh. In verse 0 he then contrasts the evil woman to the virtuous maiden. Unfortunately, Young interpreted his reference as to an evil girl, who is, nevertheless, not married. <sup>30</sup> But the passage here ndicates nothing evil about the "way of a man with a maid." The writer parallels it to the atural events of a bird in flight, a snake on a rock and a ship at sea. These things amaze him s does the way of a man with a maid. The meaning here is obviously that of the natural attraction and affection of men for girls. The expression is not one of lust, but of the mystery of vonderful human affection. As a bird takes to the air and a snake to the rocks and a ship to the ea, so does a man to a 'almāh. The juxtaposition of the next verses by the compiler provides contrast between the natural blessing of the virtuous maiden and the evil of the adulterous yoman. Therefore, the picture here should be interpreted as that of a virgin maid.

Biblical usage of  $\frac{c_{a} lm \bar{a}h}{lm a}$  is clearly never that of a married woman, but always of an amarried one. In non-Biblical usage a parallel may be drawn from the marriage between bikkal and Yarih in the Ras Shamra tablets.<sup>31</sup> Nikkal is designated once by the exact etymoogical counterpart of  $\frac{c_{a} lm \bar{a}h}{c_{a} lm a}$  (glmt) and once by the cognate of  $\frac{bethul \bar{a}h}{b}$  (btlt). Therefore, it ppears that the two terms are used synonomously in the Ras Shamra literature. Though glmt s not the common word for "virgin" in Ugaritic either, it is never used of a married woman ind seems well suited for application to a woman who is not yet married. Also, in the "Legend of Keret" the marriage of Keret to Hry shows that the term glmt is applied to Hry before the wedding, but is never used to describe her afterwards. Thus, pre-Isaianic, and even pre Mosaic usage show that the use of (almah) instead of bethulah in Isaiah 7:14 does not prove tha the woman was not a virgin, but on the contrary it seems to prove that she was indeed one.<sup>3</sup>:

Consider also that the ordinary word for "virgin" ( $\underline{b^ethul\bar{a}h}$ ) does not itself guarante by its usage that its referent is in fact always a virgin. In Deuteronomy 22:19 and Joel 1:  $\underline{b^ethul\bar{a}h}$  refers to a married woman. Therefore, the term  $\underline{b^ethul\bar{a}h}$  does not itself giv absolute certainty that the maiden is always a virgin.<sup>33</sup> If Isaiah wished to use a word tha would exactly express his intention, the use of  $\underline{calm\bar{a}h}$  would better signify absolute virginit than would the more common term  $\underline{b^ethul\bar{a}h}$ . It is quite obvious that if Isaiah intended t conveys a prediction of the virgin-birth he chose the right word, not an improper one. Ther is no basis for asserting that he should have used another word in place of  $\underline{calm\bar{a}h}$ , for usag indicates that 'almah was the most correct term to use to signify an unmarried virgin.<sup>34</sup>

TIME OF ACTION IN V. 14

It is quite important to determine whether the verbal elements of this passage indicate. future or present time. The standard translation has been: "shall conceive and bear a son (KJV). Dillmann tried to hold out for acceptance of the usage as future and, indeed, it was fel by most earlier interpreters of the "messianic" view of the passage that their position reste upon the future tense.<sup>33</sup> However, it has been demonstrated by many that the tense is present and this has only further strengthened the "messianic" interpretation of the passage and no weakened it.

The contextual usage of  $h\bar{a}r\bar{a}h$  makes it difficult to interpret this phrase in the futurtense. The future would only be valid if the participle were used with hineh. However, th ordinary participial form would be horah. The form harah is neither a verb nor a participle but a feminine adjective connected with an active participle ("bearing") and denotes that the scene is present to the prophet's view.<sup>36</sup> This usage is similar then to the annunciation of the Angel of the Lord to Hagar in the wilderness: "Behold! thou art pregnant and will bear a son (Gen. 16:12).<sup>37</sup> Thus, Isaiah's formula for announcing this birth is not uncommon to Scripture

It is quite obvious that the verbal time indicated here should be taken as a present tense and so most since Lowth have agreed.<sup>38</sup> The concept of the time element involved is verimportant to the interpretation of the passage. If the word (almāh means "virgin" and if this (almāh is already pregnant and about to bear a son, then, the girl is still a virgin, even thoug she is a mother. Consider the contradiction if this passage is not referring to the only virgin birth in history--that of Jesus Christ. The virgin is pregnant! How can she still be a virgin and be pregnant at the same time? The implication is that this child is to be miraculously bors without a father and despite the pregnancy, the mother is still considered to be a virgin. The word (almāh ("virgin") implies a present state of virginity just as the word hārāh implies a present state of pregnancy. If the verbal action were in the future tense there would be no guarantee that the virgin who would (in the future) bear a son, would still be a virgin, and no a wife.<sup>39</sup> But if a "virgin" is with child" and is obviously both a virgin and a mother, we can not escape the conclusion that this is a picture of the virgin birth.<sup>40</sup> If the  $\frac{c_{almah}}{almah}$  is to be seen as marrying, losing her virginity, then conceiving and searing a son, we should have expected ishah if the marriage were contemplated before coneption.<sup>41</sup> The adjective points to the state of the calmah's pregnancy as if it had already egun, so that Gundry concludes: "we must understand that she conceives and bears in her tatus as calmah."<sup>42</sup>

With the above considerations, the question of the identity of the "virgin" is settled, or only Mary the mother of Jesus can meet the qualifications to fulfill this prophecy. The irgin is not the prophet's wife,<sup>43</sup> the wife of Ahaz,<sup>44</sup> the wife of Hezekiah,<sup>45</sup> nor some unknown y-stander.<sup>46</sup> She is the only Virgin-Mother history or Scripture has ever recorded. Only he direct "Messianic" interpretation of Isaiah 7:14 does justice to the content of the passage. Vhat need is there for seeing a dual-fulfillment and who from Scripture can qualify for it? Let nterpreters no longer wallow in the quagmire of immediacy, but see the true intention of this assage.

IMMANUEL

The main thrust of Isaiah's statement is undoubtedly the name of the child:  $(imanu)^{2} ell$ "God with us"). According to the consistent usage in Isaiah, such names indicate what the erson is or what he represents, rather than merely being his proper name.<sup>47</sup> Therefore, he name, in its proper designation, was not arbitrary but characteristic of the individual.<sup>48</sup> f we identify "Immanuel" messianically, as the foregoing evidence indicates we should, then, he name may be taken to mean that God will personally be among men in the person of Immanuel.

The child Immanuel has been interpreted many ways: as Ahaz's son, Hezekiah;<sup>49</sup> as a nythical hero;<sup>50</sup> the prophet's son (either Mahar-shalal-hash-baz or a third son);<sup>51</sup> the mere bstraction of God's blessing upon Israel.<sup>52</sup> Stenning even tried to read-out (imānu'ēl from he text by offering the variant yisrā'ēl.<sup>53</sup> However, the Dead Sea Scroll of Isaiah (IQIs<sup>a</sup>) learly supports the reading: "Immanuel" and wipes out Stenning's so-called evidence.

The power and person of Immanuel as he is seen in the Prince of the four names in chapter nine demand someone far beyond human imperfection. Because of the close association of Immanuel with the land in chapter eight and the description of his bringing peace to the land we see one of divine ability.

The purpose of Immanuel as a sign seems to be as a guarantee of the perpetuity of the endangered throne of David. In some way his birth will indicate deliverance and hope for the Davidic line. Ahaz was given the promise that Syria and Ephraim would not overcome his land. Ahaz was told by Isaiah that before the childcould grow to discern right from wrong (2-3 years?) the land of Judah would be rid of these two northern invaders. If the prophecy points to the supernatural birth of the Messiah from within David's family line, then the question of hope for the Davidic throne is answered and the perpetuity of the family line is guaranteed. <sup>54</sup>

The problem in the strictly "messianic" interpretation is how this child's early years can be related to Christ who was born centuries later. Young replies that the birth and growth, though in prediction, are a picture of the brief time until destruction will come upon Judah' enemies.<sup>55</sup> How is this possible? Remember that Isaiah saw the vision of the falmah as thoug she already existed, pregnant and bearing the child and spoke in the present tense though th event was yet in the future.<sup>56</sup> Isaiah speaks so confidently of the certainty of his predictio that he speaks of the child as if he already exists and carries over the "present condition" o the vision to the contemporary situation. The infancy of the child serves to symbolize the fac that Judah's desolation for the present will be short-lived, but ultimately will be far greate because of Ahaz's sin.<sup>57</sup> Therefore, the prophecy does have significance and relevance to Ahaz; he is to avoid the attempted alliance with Assyria or a worse result will come upon him.

GRACE JOURNAL

The feature of Old Testament prophecy is that it often compresses chronology in its viewpoint of events by connecting events in picture that are actually separated in history. The conditions more immediately relating to Isaiah's day prevailed in the land until Immanuel's day. Isaiah sees with eyes of faith the future birth of Immanuel as a present reality. Though the name "God with us" does not alone prove the deity of Immanuel the wider context of chapters nine and eleven make this fact clear. Culver warns: "Too often expositors have sought to explain one portion of the prophecy without the other."<sup>58</sup> However, when one considers the full context the picture of Immanuel is much more definite and complete and provides a better indication of how the New Testament interprets the single passage in Isaiah 7:14.

The Child in chapter nine is the coming ruler of Judah. This "gift-child" is the same as the Immanuel child as the context shows. The child's four titles provide a thorough picture o him. The Massoretic accentuation supports the concept of these titles being four, each consisting of two members:<sup>59</sup> PELE yoetz EL gibbor abi AD sar SHALOM.

These titles are actual descriptions of the ruler rather than titulary epithets. <sup>60</sup> He is a wonderful counsellor, the mighty God, the father of eternity and the Prince of Peace. The term 'ēl gibor is most significant since it indicates deity. Gibor means "hero" and in Canaanite literature is used interchangeably between men and gods. But in this passage its use is specified by 'ēl so that it means either "a God of a hero" (appositional genitive) or "a heroic God" (adjective). In either case the description indicates divinity. This child, Immanuel, is then to be the "Mighty God" Himself and, therefore, literally "God with us."

Consider also the reference to the "shoot from the stump" in chapter eleven. Immanuel has been foretold coming as the virgin's son to rule over Israel and insure the throne of David. But now, in this passage we are given the proper sequence of events. His actual coming is to be delayed. The tree of David shall be cut down as the result of Ahaz's unbelief, but a shoot will spring forth from the rootstock of Jesse and flourish again. The perpetuity of the Davidic throne that so threatened the worried Ahaz was in God's sovereign control. He alone could preserve it. But so hopeless was the condition of Israel's rulers that He would begin anew. The prophet sees the mighty Davidic dynasty as only a felled tree with only its geza' ("rootstock," "stump") remaining. But from that stump a twig will sprout and from the roots a branch will flourish ain. That flourishing will accomplish the true purpose of God for David's throne: it will ing righteousness and faithfulness and the destruction of the wicked (v. 4, 5).<sup>61</sup> Judah need of fear, for the time will come when God's King will sit on the throne. All indications of the Il context of the "Book of Immanuel" (ch. 7-12) are that we are pointed to the coming of Jesus hrist, the Son of God.

Finally, a word is in order about Matthew's quotation of Isaiah 7:14 as relating to the rth of Jesus to the virgin Mary. On the basis of the foregoing study it hardly seems necessary yen to consider those critics who have denied any validity to Matthew's interpretation.  $^{62}$  One innot deny the force of Matthew's statement in 1:23 in which he states that Isaiah predicted the rgin birth of Christ.

In concluding his study of Matthew's use of the Old Testament, Gundry says of this assage that in view of the meaning of  $\frac{\operatorname{calmah}}{\operatorname{calmah}}$ , the connection of the prediction to the line of avid, and the frequency of individual messianic prophecies throughout Isaiah, the "messianic" terpretation is much preferred for it reveals the Messiah about to be born (7:14); Messiah prn (9:5); Messiah reigning (11:1-5). 63

Luke 24:24-27 and 44-47 tell us that Christ Himself taught His disciples the Old Testaent prophecies concerning Himself. Where did Matthew get the idea that Isaiah 7:14 applied Christ? Is it not likely that he got it from Christ Himself? Therefore, let the matter of the terpretation of Isaiah's Immanuel be settled. He is not merely a sign of his own times, but e is the Sign of the Ages--Jesus Christ, "God with us."

DOCUMENTATION

- 1. For a discussion of the development of these trends see E. Hindson, "Development of Interpretation of Isaiah 7:14," Grace Journal, 10 (Spring, 1969), pp. 19-25.
- The most recent commentary on Isaiah declines to take a definite position. Cf. H. Leupold, Exposition of Isaiah, Vol. I. (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1968), pp. 153-60. Young's influence, however, may already be seen in the comments of two writers on the prophets who follow his lead in interpreting Isaiah 7:14. These, however, are not commentaries as such. Cf. S. Schultz, The Prophets Speak (New York: Harper & Row, 1968), pp. 107, 108; H. Freeman, An Introduction to the Old Testament Prophets (Chicago: Moody Press, 1968), pp. 203-209.
- Some have argued that it stops at 9:7, but the wider section has been effectively substantiated by J. Lindblom, A Study on the Immanuel Section in Isaiah (Lund: Gleerup, 1958), pp. 3-5.
- 4. For a discussion of the minor variations in typical Semitic writing and comparative narration see G.D. Young, Oudtestamentische Studien, Deel VIII, 1950, pp. 291-99.
- 5. Cf. E. Thiele, The Mysterious Numbers of the Hebrew Kings (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1951), pp. 120 ff., for a discussion of the chronology of the period. Also, Glazebrook, Studies in the Book of Isaiah (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1910), p. 42, accepts the 735-3 date, saying that the historical context allows us to fix the date with "unusual accuracy.

- Cf. R.S.V., "in league with." The phrase cannot mean "lighting upon" (as an attach in this situation. Cf. E. Kraeling, "The Immanuel Prophecy," Journal of Biblici Literature, 50 (1931), p. 277 n.
- 7. This helpful note is pointed out by W. Wordworth, En-Roeh: the Prophecies of Isaia the Seer (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1939), p. 73.
- 8. Cf. E. Young, The Book of Isaiah, Vol. I, N.I.C. (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1965) p. 271 n. He takes Jennings to task for "spiritualizing away" these descriptions.
- 9. Tab'el, "good is God." For an equivalent usage see I Kings 15:18 (tab-rimmon, "goo is Rimmon").
- 10. J. Raven, Emmanuel (London: Longmans, Reader and Dyer, 1872), p. 10. This rar volume is very helpful in discussing the Isaiah seven passage.
- 11. Many commentators have emphasized the significance of this challenge by providin their own translation: G. S. Smith, "If ye have not faith, ye cannot have staith"; M Luther, "Glaubet ihr nicht, so bleibet ihr nicht"; J. McFadyen, "No Faith, no fixity. Quoted in A. R. Gordon, The Faith of Isaiah (London: James Clark & Co., 1919), p. 62 n Such attempts have prompted this writer to try his own hand: "If you will not confide then you will not abide!"
- Cf. Brown, Driver and Briggs, A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testamen (Oxford: University Press, 1907), p. 486.
- 13. Cf. E. Young, Studies in Isaiah (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1954), p. 156.
- 14. Fausset says it implies a "miraculous token." Cf. Jamiesson, Fausset and Brown, Commentary on the Whole Bible (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, n.d.), p. 437. Kraeling, op. cit., believes that "something unusual" is to be looked for here. J. A. Alexander, The Earlier Prophecies of Isaiah (New York: Wiley & Putnam, 1846), pp. 111-112, how ever has shown that the term "sign" does not necessarily demand a miracle in every instance, but that the context of this passage indicates one.
- However, it may be a miracle (cf. Isa. 38:8; Judg. 6:37; Ex. 4:8), or a prediction (cf. Ex. 3:12; 2 Kings 19:29) or even a symbolic name or action (cf. Isa. 38:18; Ezek. 4:8).
- Cf. Young, Studies, p.157. He speculates that the substitution of this word for Yahwel was deliberate on the prophet's part.
- Calvin seems to have been the first to point this out. Cf. J. Calvin, Commentarii in Isaiam prophetam (Geneva: 1570).
- Young, Studies, p. 158, regards the address as being to all the nation, but Alexander, op. cit., provides a much more convincing argument for the house of David which was implicated by Ahaz's unbelief.
- 19. For further consideration of the significance of the "sign" see below in this article.
- F. Delitzsch, Biblical Commentary on the Old Testament: Isaiah, Vol. I (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1949), p. 216, regards it as always introducing a future occurrence in Isaiah. Yet in Isa. 6:7 this does not seem to be the case.
- 21. Cf. Young, Studies, p. 161. He goes on to state that a verbal adjective should be taken as expressing present conditions.
- 22. Young discusses this term at length in Studies (1954), pp. 161-63, but reduces the significance of it in his more recent commentary, The Book of Isaiah (1965), pp. 284-86.
- 23. Op. cit., p. 19.

- E. Hengstenberg, Christology of the Old Testament and a Commentary on Messianic Predictions, Vol. II (Grand Rapids: Kregal, 1956), p. 44.
- 5. Cf. however, J. Mauchline, Isaiah 1-39 (New York: Macmillan, 1962), p. 99, who says, without supporting proof, that Isaiah merely refers to "some woman." Others have attempted to avoid the definiteness of this phrase by proposing that Isaiah referred to the virgin of a popular and contemporary myth. Cf. G. Gray, The Book of Isaiah, Vol. I, I.C.C. (New York: Scribner's Sons, 1912), p. 125, who quotes Gressmann as saying that there was a popular prophecy of a young child who would deliver Judah and that Isaiah refers to this child. However, the proof for this is totally lacking and even advocates of this view cannot agree upon which myth Isaiah followed.
- Cf. Young, Studies, p. 164, and Alexander, op. cit., p. 219.
  For an example, see the Interpreter's Bible, Vol. V (New Yorl)
  - For an example, see the Interpreter's Bible, Vol. V (New York: Abingdon, 1956), p. 218. It is interesting to note that the exegetical section denies a miraculous virgin birth, while the expositional section affirms it on the same page! Perhaps Kilpatrick forgot to heed Scott's warning that an "inaccurate translation" of the LXX by the New Testament must not "prejudice" our interpretation. It might be well for the editors to get together on their hermeneutics!
- Gray, op. cit., pp. 126, 27.
  Cf. E. Dewart, Jesus the Mes
  - Cf. E. Dewart, Jesus the Messiah in Prophecy and Fulfillment (Cincinnati: Cranston & Stowe, 1891), p. 123. Therefore, T. Cheyne, The Prophecies of Isaiah, Vol. I (New York: Whittaker, 1888), even saw in his day that we ought not force a parallel between calmāh and elem ("to hide") which is not an actual derivation. He notes that the Arabic cognate habat ("girl") is not related to habaa ("to hide in a tent").
- 0. Young, Studies, pp. 176-77.
- For a detailed survey of extra-Biblical occurrences of 'almah and its equivalents cf. C.
  Gordon, Ugaritic Handbook, III, p. 220.
- 2. This conclusion is also reached by C. Gordon, "Almāh in Isaiah 7:14," Journal of Bible and Religion, XXI (1953), p. 106. He writes: "The commonly held view that 'virgin' is Christian, whereas 'young woman' is Jewish is not quite true. The fact is that the Septuagint, which is the Jewish translation made in pre-Christian Alexandria, takes 'almāh to mean 'virgin' here. Accordingly, the New Testament follows Jewish interpretation in Isaiah 7:14.
- Cf. G. Knight, A Christian Theology of the Old Testament (London: SCM Press, 1964), p. 309.
- 4. One cannot help but wonder what the deniers of the virgin-birth prediction would say if Isaiah had used the term bethulah. Would their theological presuppositions cause them to turn to Joel 1:8 and say that bethulah cannot mean virgin and thus Isaiah is not predicting a virgin birth?!!
- 5. Cf. A. Dillmann, Das Prophet Jesaia (Leipig: 1890), p. 70.
- 6. For a detailed discussion of the use of harah see Alexander, op.cit., p. 121 and Young, Studies, pp. 161, 62. Young concludes that "the adjective should be taken as expressing present condition, unless there are compelling reasons to the contrary. Such reasons are not present in Isaiah 7:14..."
- J. Skinner, The Book of the Prophet Isaiah I-XXXIX (Cambridge: University Press, 1900), p. 56, similarly translates this passage: "is with child" (present) and "shall bear" (future).

- 38. Cf. R. Lowth, Isaiah (Boston: Buckingham, 1815), p. 70. He translated this passage "Behold, the virgin conceiveth, and beareth a son...." H. Cowles, Isaiah: with Note (New York: Appleton & Co., 1869), p. 52, also agreed that: "the Hebrew words rendere 'shall conceive' and 'shall bear' are in the present tense, meaning is with child and i bringing forth. ..the first is strictly a verbal adjective denoting a state of pregnancy."
- 39. This is how G. Archer, "Isaiah," The Wycliffe Bible Commentary (Chicago: Mood Press, 1962), pp. 617, 18, tries to accept the meaning of (almāh as "virgin" but sees dual-fulfillment of the passage in that Isaiah has lost his first wife and now will take virgin to wife who will (in the future, as his wife) bear him a son. Of course, there i no evidence that Isaiah lost his first wife and later remarried.
- 40. This conclusion is mildly adopted by Young, Studies, p. 163, but should be mor strongly pressed as the key argument in this discussion as it has by E. Hindson, Isaiah Immanuel: A Sign of His Times or the Sign of the Ages? Master's Thesis presented t Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, Illinois 1967, pp. 48-51 and by R. H Gundry, The Use of the Old Testament in St. Matthew's Gospel (Leiden: E. J. Brill 1967), pp. 226, 27. This latter work is an excellent and overwhelmingly scholarl monograph that should be given thorough consideration by the reader.
- 41. Cf. Gundry, ibid., p. 226, and O. Procksch, Jesaia I (Leipzig, 1930), p. 143.
- 42. Ibid.
- 43. So Archer, op. cit., p. 618.
- 44. So Gray, op. cit., p. 126.
- 45. Knight, op. cit., pp. 309, 10, gets credit for this unusual view. He sees Hezekiah's son as Immanuel. But Manasseh was anything but "God with us."
- 46. Cf. S. Mowinckel, He That Cometh (New York: Abingdon, 1954), p. 111. He is so stron on this point that he makes a direct Christological interpretation "out of the question. Why? He adds, "because the sign is intended to make Ahaz believe absolutely in Yahweh surrender himself to Him in complete trust and obedience, and in virtue of this choic decide to adopt the right attitude in the contemporary situation. . . ." If this were th case, why did not the sign produce this result? Where is any evidence of Ahaz's "faith," "surrender," "complete trust," or "obedience"? The evidence negates the argument Ahaz rejected the sign and sought Assyria's help regardless!
- 47. Cf. C. Gordon, Introduction to Old Testament Times (Ventor, New Jersey: Ventor Press-1953), p. 210.
- Cf. the excellent discussion on the Hebrew use of proper names by C. von Orelli, Th Prophecies of Isaiah (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1895), p. 53.
- 49. So J. Klausner, The Messianic Idea in Israel (New York: Macmillan, 1955), pp. 56, 57: To take this position, though, he must disregard the chronological data showing Hezekia to be already born when the prophecy was delivered.
- 50. So R. Kittel, Die hellenistische Mysterienreligion und das Alte Testament (Stuttgarte 1924), pp. 1-80. He tries to connect the child eating "curds and honey" in v. 15 wit Egyptian mythology that eventually found its way into the Canaanite and Greek "myster religions."
- 51. Cf. Archer, op. cit., p. 618.
- 52. Cf. Gray, op. cit., p. 124.
- 53. Cf. Stenning, The Targum of Isaiah (London: Oxford: University Press, 1949), p. 25

- 54. Cf. G. Jelf, Messiah Cometh (London: Innes & Co., 1899), p. 120. He states: "the prophecy evidently points to a supernatural birth within David's family...."
- 55. Young, Studies, pp. 196-98. He writes: "the language of the prophecy is filled with mystery and even obscurity. . .but is language of profound and beautiful symbolism."
- 56. Cf. K. Yates, Essentials of Biblical Hebrew (New York: Harper & Row, 1954), pp. 134, 35, for a discussion of the "Perfect of Prophecy" used by the prophet to portray confidence in the certainty of the fulfillment of his prediction.
- 57. This interpretation recognizes the reference to "butter and honey" (v. 15) as indicating impoverishment. Gray, op. cit., p. 124, sees it as referring to prosperity; Machline, op. cit., p. 99, tries to relate it to Egyptian or Babylonian mythology. However, W. E. Vine, Isaiah: Prophecies, Promises, Warning (London: Oliphants, 1953), pp. 35, 36, has pointed to the context noting that instead of a prosperous farm there is only "a young cow and two sheep," and instead of a flourishing vineyard, only "briers and thorns." Alexander, op. cit., p. 114, also agrees that the picture here is one of desolation.
- R. Culver, "Were the Old Testament Prophecies Really Prophetic?" in Can I Trust My Bible? (Chicago: Moody Press, 1963), p. 104. See his excellent discussion of the Immanuel prophecy.
- 59. The telisha in pl is the smallest of all disjunctive accents; the geresh in smu is stronger than both of them; but the zakeph in gibor is the greatest divider in the sentence. For the best detailed discussion of the use of accents in this passage see Delitzsch, op. cit., p. 250.
- 50. Thus the Hebrew concept of kingship is not based on the Egyptian influence of titulary titles of the pharaohs as is maintained by A. Alt, Kleine Schriften, II, pp. 219f. For a scholarly and convincing criticism see K. Kitchen, Ancient Orient and Old Testament (Chicago: Inter-Varsity Press, 1966), pp. 106-11. He shows that the Hebrew titles are actually more parallel in usage to the Ugaritic epithets of Niqmepa, who is described as: "Lord of justice," "master of the (royal) house," "protector," and "builder."
- 51. Notice the close parallel between ch. 9 and ch. 11. The Lord will give this ruler wisdom, perception, counsel, might, knowledge, etc. He has the same qualities as the "gift-child."
- 52. For example cf. Interpreter's Bible, V, p. 218, where the writer states: "that he (Matthew) used these (O. T. quotes) without particular regard to their meaning in their original context is clear. . the New Testament's use of Isa. 7:14 is based on an inaccurate translation of the Hebrew text."
- 63. Gundry, op. cit., p. 227. His work is an excellent defense of the validity of Matthew's use of O. T. quotations in a Messianic context.