THE GREETINGS OF THE PRESIDENT

In the relatively few years of its existence the Evangelical Theological Society has made, I believe, a worthy contribution to Biblical study in this country. Representing the vast majority of the evangelical schools are found among its members. It has maintained its position as a society for advanced scholarship based upon the Bible, limited to those of advanced professional standing or those who have made a special contribution to the field. The original fundamental bases of Biblical belief have also been carefully maintained, both in letter and in spirit.

We are thankful for this record. But our desire now is to advance. Through the new categories of student and associate membership the Society is capable of reaching a much larger evangelical public. To this we are anxious to minister. We do not want to maintain our theology in an ivory tower. Solid Biblical research should be spread abroad. We are now anxious also to enlarge our regular membership. There are doubtless many others who are one with us in conviction and are vitally interested in thorough study who should swell our ranks and improve our program. Let us encourage their entrance into our membership.

We should advance also in quality. Through the Society we have a good market for new ideas. Let us use it. Solid manuscripts for monographs and articles are welcome. Society meetings both national and regional give us a healthy opportunity for self-criticism before publication. The Bulletin is being expanded. May the next few years see great improvement and extension in our work. To this we all may well re-dedicate ourselves.

EXEGETICAL NOTES — The Meaning of Kipper, “Atonic.”

The root kpr is defined as meaning “probable cover” in Brown, Driver and Briggs’ Lexicon and similarly in Koehler-Baumgartner. These lexicons and many other sources (as the Scofield Bible note to Ex. 29:29) argue from this meaning that the OT symbolism involved a covering over of sin or a temporary dealing, without the concept of reconciliation. The usage of the words, however, makes this definition questionable.

There are apparently four roots, kpr. One means “village.” A second gives us the name of a young lion. Another gives us the word kopher “pitch.” The final one is said to mean “cover.” We have to do only with the latter two.

The Qal stem of kaphar “cover” is not used in the OT. The alleged meaning “cover” is derived from an Arabic cognate, “cover,” or “hide,” or an Akkadian and Aramaic root “wipe off,” “rub off.” Actually, the OT witnesses only to a noun kopher and other terms derived from that noun. The noun kopher is used 13 times. It is translated “ribe” twice, “a ransom” eight times, “satisfaction” twice, and “sum of money” once. Concordance study of the verses show that in every case a substitution price is referred to. The word is never used to indicate a cover or covering of any kind.

The verb kipper is used, however, 92 times in the Piel, seven times in the Pual, once in the Hitpael, and once in a Niphal form. All of these stems may be used demonomially. That is, they may mean only that the verb is derived from the simple noun form. For instance, the noun dabhar “word,” gives rise to the denominative verb in the Piel, dibber “to speak.” So the word kopher “ransom,” should give rise to the denominative Piel form kipper “to give a ransom,” and indeed, the verb is so used. Not once does it refer to covering anything with anything. Most of the 92 instances speak of the ritual atonement by blood. It is totally unnecessary to import into these verses the idea of merely covering over sin. The ritual symbolically represents substitution. Only in one place, Genesis 32:20 could the meaning be stretched to mean “cover” — Jacob said, “I will appease his face with the gift.” This can just as well be rendered, “I will render him propitious by the gift.” The few uses of the other stems accord well with this meaning.

There are two nouns derived from this denominative verb, kippurim “atonement,” and kapporeth “mercy seat.” The first word is used eight times and always of the ritual atonement by substituted blood, animal, or money. The second word is used twenty-seven times and always of the lid of the ark which bore the cherubim. Formerly some argued that this was called kapporeth because it covered the ark. Brown, Driver and Briggs’ Lexicon remarks that this “has no justification in usage.” It is clear from Leviticus 16:13-16 that it is called the kapporeth because there the high priest “makes an atonement” (kipper). The mercy seat could better be called the “atonement place.” The Septuagint translates it hilasterion which is a term applied to Christ in Romans 3:25.

The third usage mentioned at the beginning, kopher “pitch,” with its verb “smear with pitch,” is doubtless not to be related to this fourth usage. It is paralleled by the word kupra “asphalt” in Akkadian, and is used in Hebrew only in the account of Noah’s ark: “shall pitch it . . . with pitch,” (Gen. 6:14). Even here the meaning “cover” is not suitable.

We should conclude that the assumed derivation from an Arabic root “cover,” is misleading. The usage of the root gives the definition: to atone by paying a ransom. In the OT this was symbolized by sacrifice.
